

Little Angel

Somebody once told Little Angel that she was an angelic being. She was told that she was easily recognizable because of the rays of light beaming out from her back, making it look like she had wings.

It could be true, Little Angel supposed. She could see other differences between her and some of her playmates as well. She did have a lot of light shining from her and the light would change with her moods. Sometimes it would look almost like a halo.

Some of Little Angel's playmates were fairies, some were the young guardians of the flowers and the plants, and some were visiting from other universes far more exotic than her own. Though they all looked different it didn't matter to Little Angel. She knew in her heart that they all came from the same source.

There were so many fun things to do in the Heavens. Sometimes Little Angel and her playmates would mould a whole playground full of slides, one leading down to another and the last slide going all the way up again. Some of the slides would twist and turn. Some of them would wobble and some of them would turn them up-side-down as Little Angel and her friends slid down.

Sometimes Little Angel and her playmates would have a snow ball fight, only the balls weren't made of snow but of energy. Energy balls were not as cold as snow balls and when you got hit they didn't hurt but tickle horribly. The playmates would team up and hide behind the clouds and sometimes they would wage war on one of the more aloof spirits who was suddenly not so ascended anymore but joined in the fun.

Little Angel and her friends tried to play hide and seek in the flower field but that didn't turn out too well. They would all just transform into the nearest flower and nobody could tell what was flower and what was playmate.

One day Little Angel was told that now it was time to get to work. She was told that because of her loving disposition she was well qualified to become a guardian angel. She liked the idea of being able to help others and was eager to start her training.
